EDITORIAL

This issue is going to need a pantie girdle to hold it all in by the time we get finished. We are happy to have a variety of sources for our material this issue. Starting with Tina Alameda's Halloween pictures from her home town, West Hollywood, where we finally have some of what you asked for all these years: good, fun, drag photos. Those dolls in W.H. do it up right!

From a recent trip to Paris we have a book about a famous figure of the 1920s, Barquette, who was lauded by Cocteau and photographed by Man Ray. Renowned for his delicacy and taste, he was the toast of Parisian society.

Sarah Luiz is a woman with a past. But not the past you might suspect. Her fascinating ordeal was concisely described by the Boston Globe and we have reprinted the article for your help and hope.

"TV Training Center" is one of our most recent videos. For those of you who love to see a guy without a trace of surgery or hormonal help be transformed into a knockout of a woman, you will love this layout and video.

Now, besides all these special features, we have our regular goodies: letters from you, tons of personal ads and our product-stuffed catalog.

Please help yourself to what we have to offer and if you like what you see, drop us a line and let us know. Even if you don't like what you see, tell us. We want to hear from you.

*Much love,
Kim*

HALLOWEEN 1990

Our roving reporter Tina Alameda and her band of invert gypsies launched into the thick of the night to bring back to you photographic evidence of cross-gender recreation. These particular photos hail from West Hollywood, California, but we all know that on any given Halloween in any town large enough to have more than twenty gay people, that there will be a certain amount of this kind of frivolity. We'd love to see your pictures from halloween as well, so send them on ahead and we can have a year round costume event!

HALLOWEEN 1990

Published in 1980 by Jaques Damase, this book is a rare gem we found on a recent spree in Paris.

Barquette was a trapeze artist of the '20s and a performer who chose to wear women's clothing as part of the act.

Unlike most acrobatics, Barquette was renowned to have a delicacy of sensibilities that allowed transcendence of the carnival level of entertainment. Jean Cocteau was enchanted by Barquette and found profound artistic significance in the work Man Ray, too, was inspired to edify Barquette in photographs. Eventually Barquette became the toast of Parisian society and travelled the world with the act. Besides Cocteau's essay in French and the lavish and haunting photos, there is an interview with Barquette by Francis Steegmuller. In English, the interview portrays a charmingly anachronistic gentleman who clashes with the setting, Texas, in which the interview is conducted. But, we are treated to a glimpse of an attitude of past lives, of past styles and of an innocence past as well.

Dear Kim,

It's so new and fresh. I've just recently started dressing for fun, and I'm so excited about the possibilities.

I look quite sexy and nice when I dress up and use make-up.

I really went wild and shaved my legs once. It felt so good. I'm thinking of shaving all the time. It's such a sexy feeling in silky nylons. I'm all for a nice, sexy pair of nylons. They really accent my sexy butt and legs.

You'll be so impressed with my story: My wife sews for some people and lo and behold, a TV came to her to share his experiences with her. Recently, I was a hidden TV, now my wife gets a kick out of it. She's even helped me to acquire a sexy, soft look.

I now look like a sexual toy as I write this to you. I'm in a red blouse with a ruffle around my butt to accent it. My blouse is see-through, under it is a black basque-type strapless bra.

Looks super.

I have on large red earrings and a choker to accent me and give me femininity. It's so exciting to look in the mirror and see her!

My make-up techniques are quite simple: Eyeliner around 3/4 of top and bottom lids; eyebrows lengthened and shaped upwards to bring sensuality; lips in a nice red with lipliner pencil to outline and accentuate shape; nicely accented cheekbones done with my lipliner to deepen and bring contrast; powder over all to bring a nicely coordinated look.

Sensual, soft, sexy.

I feel so hot as I'm writing this in my black silk gloves, sexy panties with hearts on them and a hot-looking wig. You'll be so impressed to see me. I can be soooo hott!!!

New and exciting.
Roxanne

Dear Roxanne,

Your excitement is infectious. I'm so glad for you that you have such an ideal situation. Some of you are not so lucky, so enjoy it and have a ball!

Best,
Kim

Dearest Kim,

Hi girlfriend, hope this finds you and everyone at F.M.I. well. I know it's been ages since you heard from me, so I thought I'd check in to let you and all my sisters in on what I've been up to.

I've been quite busy being the woman I love to be, and since my last letter to F.M.I. was published a few years ago, lots has changed. At that time I was content to dress femininely in privacy, no one had ever seen me in person as Michelle, and no one knew of my feminine personality except those I correspond with. Boy has that changed!

Now I go out dressed at least once a week, usually to a drag show for a few drinks, and I've met lots of people. It was my girlfriend, Regina, who gently pushed me out the door as Michelle. Of course I wanted to, but didn't have the courage. She said I looked much too good to not be going out, and assured me that once I did I would be kicking myself for not doing it sooner.

Well, guess what? Regina was absolutely right. The high is incredible and I am thoroughly hooked!

Since accepting and embracing my femme self, my life has been so much happier and fulfilling. Last time I wrote you, I wouldn't even consider answering letters from male admirers that weren't also TVs. Now I find myself placing a new F.M.I. ad in search of just that type of correspondence.

I've been passing in public a little less than a year, but it has been a year of firsts for this girl — I never cease to shock myself, and my confidence grows with each day.

On my most recent birthday, I met with a male admirer who answered my F.M.I. ad. Being the shy girl that I am, of course I was scared to death. I'd never been out with a man. But Michelle has the courage that I don't, and since I've started letting her do the thinking, I've been having a lot more fun.

My birthday weekend turned out to be fabulous, also full of firsts, and as usual doing things I thought I would never do, like passing in straight places, even in the daytime! And he treated me just as I feel he would any lovely lady — just like a princess! Needless to say, I enjoyed every minute and plan to do it again as soon as possible!

Looking foxy and luscious is a great feeling, but being treated like a woman and accepted as one was like advancing from high school to college, and I think if asked, he will tell you that I passed with top honors.

Recently, I've also started letting my closest friends in on my secret, very nervously as you can probably guess, but I must have the greatest friends in the world, as I haven't lost any yet.

I don't expect anyone to understand my love for cross-dressing, just accept it, and they have. And after viewing my photos, they know I'm not wasting my time! One male friend told me I was a much better-looking woman than a man, and another commented that if Michelle had come to his house and he didn't know it was me, she'd have been as good as fucked!

I don't recommend such honesty for all my sisters, just that they keep in mind that being a TV is far from the worst thing one can be, and if people truly love you, they will accept anything about you. Of course, you can't know until you ask them though, so there's the catch!

In closing, I send love to all my wonderful sisters, present and future, they've taught me things about myself that I'm convinced no therapy ever could. And I love to share that, so anyone who writes me gets answered. Take care.

Kisses,
Michelle

Dear Michelle,

What an uplifting letter. Just the kind of attitude I love. I think it takes a lot of strong self-esteem to come out like you have. There are a lot of risks involved and I admire you for taking them.

Yes, I agree, you make a lovely girl: warm, friendly and just the right amount of sexy.

I have always enjoyed hearing from you and hope to hear more about your life in the future.

Love,
Kim

Dear Kim,

This time I simply had to write. Thank you, thank you, thank you. What a thrill!! More, please, of that sassy, sweet vision portrayed in "Good Boy/Bad Girl."

My imagination soared (not to mention other things), at the sight and too brief a pictorial of a male who can, without question, transform into a vision of feminine beauty.

As a closet hetero transvestite, I find it difficult, if not practically impossible, to find pictorials dedicated to those of us without breasts...who dress up in fine lingerie padded bras, frilly panties, body hugging nylons and lovely, thick-maned, free flowing wigs.

I have nothing against the pre-op transsexual, the transsexual, or the transvestite on hormones...but let's face it girls, we all started with mothers (sisters, aunts, cousins) clothing, relished in the feel, delighted in the sensations, and forever more were bound to pretty dresses, high-heels, lipstick, long hair and all.

The paths each of us chose to pursue either allowed or dis-allowed the frequency, the ability to go further or keep our proclivities confined within certain limits.

Oh! YES, I wish I had beautiful breasts, could strut my stuff proudly, dress twenty-four hours a day, let my hair grow to waist length, wear lipstick forever — but that for me is fantasy. The reality is that I love my male self equally. I further love women very much, and have never had an interest in the same sex.

That is why my particular interest and desire centers on women (not men) being involved in my dress up sessions. In essence I get off from

"I was teased by whispers in my ear, kept in a state of constant arousal and forced to endure commentary about being a

articles, visuals and pictorials that center on forced dress ups, panty and petticoat training, light humiliation and embarrassment at being put into that position, but inside loving every minute of it.

I know that my desire and love of dresses stems from the first time I was dressed as a fairy princess for a costume party by my mother and older sister. They left nothing to chance. From head to toe I was one very pretty girl.

Initially it was just a lark to me, but the sight of myself when they had finished, the sensations of silken panties, a padded bra, clinging nylons, ruffled petticoats, the dress, shoulder length wig and the smell of lipstick and perfume worked a special magic. I was hooked.

At the party no one ever suspected that I was really a boy dressed as a girl, until my sister's girlfriend told some of her other girlfriends. From that point on I was teased by whispers in my ear, kept in a constant state of arousal and forced to endure commentary about being a sissy, panty lover, dress lover, etc!

In the rear courtyard, held tightly by two of my sister's girlfriends, a third and fourth caressed my body, slowly lifted my dress and gently massaged my maleness trapped within my panties. The sensation was indescribable.

I began to writhe and moan with the pleasure being administered, but they stopped, insisting that if I wanted more I had to say over and over how much I loved being dressed as a girl; how much I loved wearing panties, pretty dresses, etc! etc! When the climax came, the end result was that a transvestite had been born and created.

That was over twenty years ago, Kim. For years I tried to deny it, but secretly down deep I always knew it was there. From that fateful party on until the age of twenty-three, I only dreamed and fantasized about that magic moment. I pretended it would go away, that I could confine my secret to the backwaters of my mind.

I was living a lie. Always it would surface and resurface in one way or another. It surfaced when I saw the movie Mondo Cane, Freebie and the Bean, etc., as well as other reminders: "Geraldine" from the Flip Wilson show, "Finochios", Rene Richards, Christine Jorgensen, Some Like it Hot, and many, many other instances — including yourself, Kim.

Life and Fate can deal us all interesting hands. For me it dealt the desire to want to dress as a woman and thrill to its every nuance. The day my girlfriend suggested I dress as a woman for her sorority Halloween party when I was twenty brought all the barriers I had built up over the years crashing to the ground.

I resisted, but the tug and secret desire were too great to deny. Once again I was "dressed", once again I was beautiful, once again I was woman.

My girlfriend was astounded. I am one of those who is fortunate enough to look extremely beautiful when dressed. I have well-shaped long legs, am thin of build (5'10"), weigh 135 lbs., and without help, have a 37-27-36 measurement. I wear a size 12 dress with ease, size 10 high heel, deep blue eyes, fine features and a body that is virtually hairless, except my arms and legs.

My girlfriend was actually jealous that I was prettier than she. I won a prize at the party for the "Prettiest Girl in Costume", at which time my girlfriend objected, came on stage, lifted my dress and pointed out that I was really a boy.

The giggles, whistles and cheers from the gathering were very humiliating to say the least. I ran from the stage in virtual embarrassment amidst catcalls and all. Before I reached the exit door, someone reached out and took the wig from my head, and a bevy of girls descended upon my person.

Once again I was in the clutches of five to six women. In front of the entire crowd they undressed me, stood back, and let all present witness my embarrassment. I was ten steps from the door with nothing but a merry widow, nylons and high-heels on.

The door was opened and I was pushed outside to find my own way home. I was devastated to say the least. I was so embarrassed and virtually near a state of tears when my girlfriend came out the door carrying my purse, dress and wig. I reached out for the dress, but she held it tightly behind her back and handed me the purse instead. "A girl should not be without her purse, lipstick and change to call home or busfare," was all she said, and went back to the party.

I was lucky, however. One of the girls at the do had taken pity on my predicament, felt sorry for me and gave me a ride home. Her name was Amber, and she had been quite taken with my ability to pass as a girl. She became quite excited at the potential prospects and drove me to her apartment where once again, a woman placed me in the unique position of donning a wig and a dress. She insisted on going out on the town (just the two of us) for drinks, dancing and wholesome girlish fun.

What a night that was. She told me that she was a lesbian, but was quite aroused at the thought of a male all sissified and prettied up like a girl. She was true to her word and kept me in a constant state of arousal. I reciprocated, of course, and spent the entire night as "Christie" for her benefit as well as mine.

"She told me she was a lesbian, but was quite aroused at the thought of a sissified male."

Amber took me home the next evening. I have often wondered if anyone in the apartment complex saw or wondered just who those two delicious, gorgeous girls were going into my apartment.

I never saw Amber again, as she was flying out to the East Coast the next morning, but I will never forget her, either. Because of her I have maintained my love of dressing up, love women all the more and constantly keep my eyes and ears open for the possibility of once again reliving a fantasy I dearly enjoy.

That's why, dear Kim, I so dearly loved the pictorial "Good Boy/Bad Girl." I wish it could have been more along the lines of my own life experience, but it's such a thrill to see an anatomical male "transform" so deliciously that I had to emerge from my closet to write you this letter of thanks.

At age 41 I can still slip into a size 12 dress with ease, and at least once a week enjoy the glory of transforming myself into the pretty girl I love to admire. If it is at all possible, could you find it in your means to provide more pictorials along the lines of a complete transformation performed by women upon a male — his subsequent thrust into embarrassing situations (the lifting of the dress, the giggling observers, etc!)

I am sure there are many of us who would be very, very grateful.

Love,
Christie

Dear Christie,

What a wonderful letter. You have a way with words and have portrayed your story in quite a gripping way. I could only hope that you would write to us with more of your experiences and fantasies for our readers to enjoy.

*Much thanks,
Kim*

Dear Kim,

I just picked up my first issue of Female Mimics and really enjoyed it better than the other magazines there are on TVs and TSs. Lots of beautiful girls.

I could use a lot of pointers in makeup and dressing. I have been dressing for many, many years and enjoy it.

I have answered some of the ads in your magazine and hope to hear from them soon, but the only thing is there isn't many girls in Northern Ohio. Wish some of the girls would place ads from Northern Ohio — come on, girls.

Enclosed are some photos of me. As you can see, I need a lot of practice in dressing.

Again, love your magazine. You are beautiful.

Love you,
Rachael

Dear Rachael,

Thanks so much for writing to us. I know it's difficult when there seems to be few other contacts in your area, but hopefully this mention in our column will help get you some responses. Hang in there!

Love,
Kim

Sarah Luiz Hear Her Roar

Catapulted to a point nearing that of folk-hero, Sarah is a person undaunted by conventions and small minds. Her story is best explained by the reprinted Boston Globe article on page 22. How often are we so lucky as to have such a socially conscious figure-head also be so delightful to look at?

To the outside world, Sarah Luiz is an attractive 28-year-old woman with a flamboyant personality. "I have a great body," she boasts. "My girlfriends don't like to go out with me because the guys look at me. I meet the most incredible men."

Actually, Sarah — formerly Jeffrey Dwight Luiz — is neither male nor female. "I'm a half-and-half freak," is the way she puts it.

The fault, Luiz maintains, lies with Massachusetts Blue Cross-Blue Shield. For nearly three years, the insurer paid for the psychotherapy and the hormone treatments preparing her for the operation to become Sarah. High daily doses of estrogen, plus twice-monthly injections of the same female hormone, have stimulated her breasts to grow, her figure to become rounded and feminine, and her voice to rise in pitch.

Now, Blue Cross refuses to pay for the $11,000 surgery that would complete the transformation.

Luiz' case revives an issue of health insurance coverage that has lain dormant since 1982, when the Massachusetts insurer decided to stop covering sex-change surgery. The decision was based in part on a 1981 report by the National Center for Health Care Technology which concluded that the operation "is controversial in our society" and experimental.

Another factor in the decision, Blue Cross ombudsman Douglas Dickson said, was a 1979 study from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore "that showed the surgery was not effective in resolving the issue of gender identity. And furthermore, there were a number of complications."

The Hopkins study, the federal agency's conclusion and Blue Cross' decision are sharply disputed by those who work with gender dysphoria — a recognized medical disorder which the patient feels strongly that he or she is trapped in the body of the wrong sex.

"The study out of Hopkins was a horrible study," said social worker Carol Steinman, a founder of the now-defunct Gender Counseling Service in Boston, who wrote a formal rebuttal to the report at the time.

The federal policy paper, some point out, actually found that eight out of nine studies — all except the Hopkins report — showed most transsexuals were better adjusted after sex-change surgery.

"In all of these studies," the position paper said, "the large majority of those who received surgery report that they are personally satisfied with the change. However, surgical complications are frequent, and a very small number of postsurgical suicides and psychotic breakdowns are reported."

Screening process

To minimize postoperative problems, reputable centers have adopted a set of guidelines aimed at making as certain as possible that a patient is wholly committed to the process and is capable of functioning — holding a job, forming relationships — in the new sex.

More often than not, during the preoperative process a patient will decide that surgery is not necessary.

"I've actually had pretty good experience helping people not go through surgery," said Terry Buck, a psychotherapist who has treated many patients with gender dysphoria, including Luiz.

Often patients have profound self-esteem problems related to their difficulty in trying to function in a role they feel mismatched to. Among men, for instance, this might stem from the lack of an approving father. "It seems like an awful long way to go to get approval from men," one therapist said, "but sometimes that's a piece of it."

The danger, Buck said, is that many people with gender dysphoria hold an almost magical belief that all their problems will be solved if they could start over in the opposite sex. "My job," she said, "is to convince them that all surgery does is change some skin around. They have to ask, 'What kind of woman — or man — do I want to be? What kind of work do I want to do?'"

Typically for such patients, Luiz says she cannot remember a time when she didn't want to be a girl. "I never felt like a boy," she said. "All I did was dream of when I'd be a woman. I knew I wasn't gay — I was trapped in the wrong body."

Some operations paid for Luiz, who is suing Blue Cross, argues the company should not have paid for her preoperative treatment without informing her they wouldn't pay for surgery.

"Blue Cross says, 'You should have known, you should have asked,'" she said. "I just assumed they would cover it since they were covering everything else. I would not have gone through this if I knew I was going to be left in midstream."

Luiz also maintains — and one attorney who has represented a number of transsexuals confirms — that Blue Cross has quietly paid for as many as eight sex-change operations since the 1982 policy change.

"A couple of years back," said the attorney, who wishes to remain anonymous, "I brought somebody to Blue Cross and their initial reaction was, 'Well, it's been a long time; we can't continue paying these forever just because some people are only now getting around to the surgery.' I said, 'I guess we'll have to go back to the question of whether it's experimental or not and whether your policy is appropriate.' The next thing I knew they paid the claim."

We'd like to thank Sarah Luiz for her sacrifices. Fighting such a private battle at such a public level can be harrowing. We cannot know the private agony she has experienced, but we know that she has set another brick in the path to our mutual enlightenment.

Dickson, the Blue Cross official, would not comment publicly on Luiz' case because of the pending suit, but he insisted that since 1982 the company has paid for surgery only when the subscriber began the sex-change process before the policy was changed.

Gauging extent of problem

Esoteric as Luiz' case may seem, the number of potential sex-change candidates is larger than many might imagine.

According to a 1987 article in the American Journal of Law and Medicine, there were an estimated 6,000 postoperative transsexuals in this country in 1983. Several hundred such operations are done each year in a half-dozen US centers.

Dr. Stanley Rosenberg, a Boston physician who has prescribed estrogen treatments for many men seeking to become women, said he was actively following about 200 such patients last year when he decided to give up the unusual sideline to concentrate on a different specialty.

In the past five years, more people have been seeking surgery and more insurance companies have decided to pay for it, said Dr. Charles E. Horton of the Eastern Virginia Medical School.

"If an insurance company recognizes this is a valid diagnostic entity for which there is not other therapy, and if it is a good insurance company that desires to cover the needs of their population, it will be included," Horton said in a telephone interview.

Horton and others asserted that the surgery is no longer experimental and that presurgical psychological screening and improvements in surgical technique justify a review of previous policies.

"What seems clear to me," said psychotherapist Buck, "is that it's time for Blue Cross to rethink and restate its rationale for not paying for it. The surgery has been going on for over 30 years. They pay for surgeries a lot newer and more experimental than that."
